FDA wants to make cookies and pizza healthier

Reuters

WASHINGTON The Food and Drug Administration on Thursday proposed banning artificial trans fats in processed food ranging from cookies to frozen pizza, citing the risk of heart disease.

Partially hydrogenated oils, which are the primary dietary source of the fats, have been shown to raise "bad" cholesterol. Reducing the use of trans fats could prevent 20,000 heart attacks and 7,000 deaths from heart disease a year, the FDA said.

"While consumption of potentially harmful artificial trans fat has declined over the last two decades in the United States, current intake remains a significant public health concern," FDA Commissioner Margaret Hamburg said.

Public health advocates welcomed the move.

"Artificial trans fat is a uniquely powerful promoter of heart disease, and today's announcement will hasten its eventual disappearance from the food supply," Michael Jacobson, executive director of the non-profit Center for Science in the Public Interest said.

The FDA's proposal is not the first public effort to ban trans fats. New York City banned the use of trans fats in restaurants, and many restaurants and fast food chains, including McDonald's Corp., have eliminated them.

Publicity stunt or just real life?

Nikki Lynette

@nikkilynette

These days it seems as if world news and entertainment news are the same thing. Kanye's interactions with the paparazzi, Miley's brief but impactful infatuation with twerking and pretty much every aspect of Rihanna's life have dominated headlines for the past year.

As information has become more accessible, many entertainers have found their lives becoming an open book, whether they like it or not. Some use it to their advantage, others rage against it. Neither approach guarantees a positive response.

The expectation for entertainers to act like role models while simultaneously being entertaining has been going on for longer than any of us has been alive. So many people make a point of publicly calling the bad behavior of entertainers and athletes ridiculous and crass and shameful, but let's keep it real. Celebs didn't just start acting up in recent years. Madonna, George Michael and even Elvis got into their fair share of trouble back in the day. The only reason it's a huge topic of discussion now is because there was no Internet in the olden days, so it was easier for bad behavior to be hidden and more difficult to get the facts straight.

Truth is, nobody would talk about celebs if they weren't behaving badly. Being discussed on gossip blogs and in tabloids might have been the best marketing move of Miley Cyrus' career. People can talk trash about her, but if she weren't giving people something to talk about, she would be completely ignored.

Think about it. Prior to her breakdown, how many people were discussing Amanda Bynes?

We live in a sensationalist era. People pretend to hate it ... but secretly, society loves it.

The assumption that everything entertainers do is just for attention is dumb. I'm not saying that publicity stunts aren't a regular occurrence for celebs—because they are, and it's nauseating.

As an entertainer, I can tell you firsthand that being yourself and speaking your mind is enough to get you bad press. When it happened to me, it was because I mentioned my pro-abortion rights stance in a song. I got called "vulgar" by the same music blogs that praise misogynistic, gang culture-glorifying rap videos. I'm sorry, but the only suitable response to that is a raised middle finger.

If you're gonna get bad-mouthed either way, then why walk on eggshells? What's the incentive for being careful? Not a damned thing.

People love to bash Rihanna for her sexy outfits and haughty attitude, but how many praised her for her $5,000 contribution to Barrington High School earlier this year? Lupe Fiasco gets backlash for his criticism of President Obama, but how much acknowledgment does he get for his efforts to make sure fresh produce becomes more accessible to low-income people in Chicago's well-documented food deserts?

If entertainers don't go out of their way to boast about it, this type of stuff rarely makes headlines. Because it's not offensive, and it doesn't involve twerking.

Celebs aren't toys created for the world's enjoyment. They're human. Are they perfect? Hell no. But if average people had cameras pointed at their lives every day, they might seem a little imperfect, too.

Maybe if we all held politicians to the same standards that we hold entertainers we wouldn't have to depend on singers and rappers to take on the job of being role models. REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR NIKKI LYNETTE, A CHICAGO NATIVE, IS AN INDIE RECORDING ARTIST WHOSE MUSIC APPEARS ON MTV, VH1, SHOWTIME AND MORE.

#OBAMASGREATBIGBONER

Didya hear? Twitter went public Thursday! And with an IPO ticking up into the billions of dollars, the social media darling's top trending topic was ... #obamasgreatbigboner. Turns out it was basically just a prank. Sirius XM radio hosts Ron and Fez started the hashtag Thursday, unrelated to the Twitter IPO, as a contest for fans to come up with their most creative responses to win a "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" Season 1 box set, daillydot.com reports. I couldn't make this up if I tried.

The hashtag started trending within minutes, with the full array of funny, gross, racist and just stupid tweets attached to it, though I think the hosts were relating "boner" more to the idea of a screw-up instead of, well, y'know. Regardless, the Internet came through, once again, on a big day for the Internet.

Chicago's space cases

Hollywood can't hog all the fun! Here are just a few of Chicago's claims to cosmos fame. M.S.

CHICAGO IN ORBIT

Sandra Bullock's character, Ryan Stone, mentions her hometown of Lake Zurich, Ill., while floating in the fictional cosmos of "Gravity." In real life, six Chicagoans have been to space, most famously Ken Mattingly, whose measles scare kept him off Apollo 13. He would later pilot the command module on Apollo 16. In all, 14 Illinoisans have been part of missions to the moon, the International Space Station or Skylab. Former Apollo 13 astronaut Jim Lovell currently lives in Lake Forest, where he owns a steakhouse.

THE EDGE OF SPACE

It's not quite orbit, but it's pretty close. Adler Planetarium is host of the Far Horizons program, in which students, amateur engineers and space enthusiasts design and build balloon missions that are flown more than 100,000 feet above Earth's surface. Currently, the planetarium is at work on CubeSats, small satellites that soon will be sent into near-Earth orbit on rockets.

THE NEXT BEST THING?

It was a bummer in 2011 when Adler Planetarium was not selected as one of three locations nationwide to receive a retired space shuttle. However, the consolation prize wasn't bad: The planetarium instead got a three-story-tall replica of a shuttle's interior, which serves as a simulator to train astronauts.

THE TRUTH IS UP THERE

One of the oldest privately funded UFO research centers calls Chicago home. The Center for UFO Studies in Norwood Park was founded 40 years ago in Evanston by J. Allen Hynek, the former chair of Northwestern's astronomy department. The "Close Encounters" system for ranking UFO sightings was the inspiration for the title of Steven Spielberg's "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

THE COSMOS IN CHICAGO

Neil deGrasse Tyson might be today's space rock star, but he follows in the footsteps of Carl Sagan. The late astronomer and astrophysicist attended the University of Chicago before he went on to popularize the topics of space and science, most notably with his series "Cosmos."

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

It's really old, lifeless, mostly empty and freezing cold—at least to the best of our human knowledge. Yet here on Earth, space is so hot right now.

"Gravity," director Alfonso Cuarón's space disaster thriller starring Sandra Bullock and George Clooney, spent an impressive three weeks at the top of the box office. Big in every way—the theatrical release included nationwide Imax 3-D screenings—"Gravity" is just one example of the final frontier being launched into pop-culture orbit.

In August 2012, NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory live-streamed its successful late-night landing of Mars rover Curiosity, which attracted 3.2 million viewers to the "seven minutes of terror."

In more than a year of poking around the red planet, not only has the rover vaporized rocks with a laser and detected signs of water, it also has amassed more than 1 million Twitter followers with its combination of pop-culture references and colorful space puns.

Back on the blue planet, evidence of space lust is everywhere:

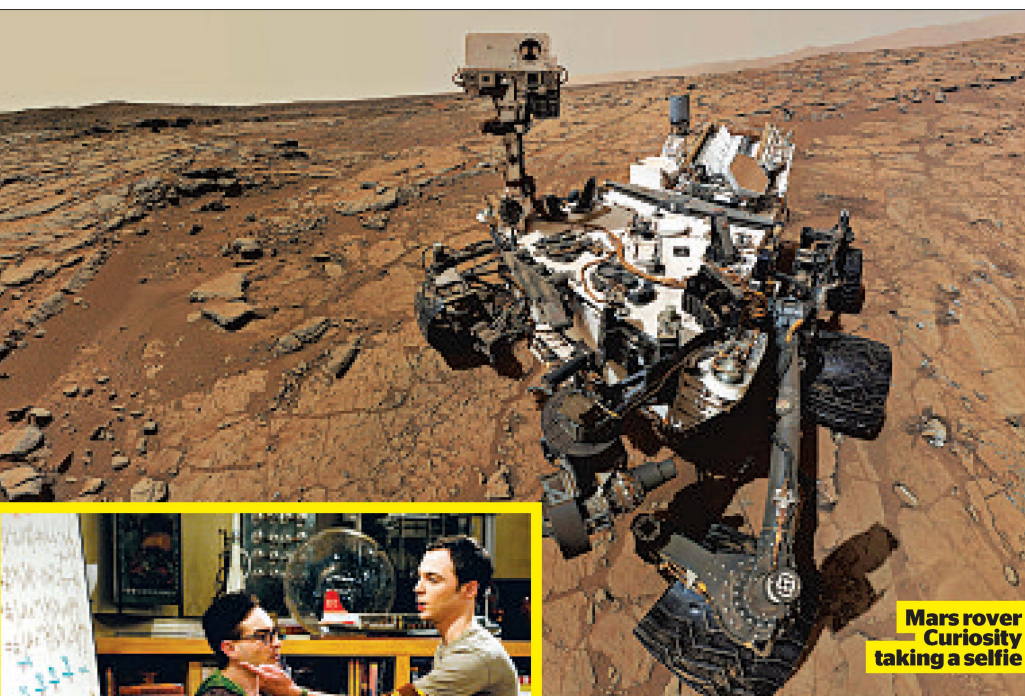

► Astrophysicist Neil deGrasse Tyson has achieved Internet meme status for his frank advocacy for science and space, and has been a regular guest and subject of commentary on both "The Daily Show" and "The Colbert Report."

► After sending one of its main characters into space last season, "The Big Bang Theory" continues to bring geek culture to the mainstream with astronomical ratings.

► In May, Canadian astronaut Chris Hadfield recorded David Bowie's "Space Oddity," the video of which quickly went viral and currently has about 18.5 million views.

► Most recently, Us Weekly reported Lady Gaga would be the first pop star to perform in space, during a Virgin Galactic flight slated for 2015.

"Certainly we're seeing a recovery of some real concentration in popular culture and interest in these sorts of things," said Robert Thompson, professor of popular culture at Syracuse University.

Mars rover
Curiosity
taking a selfie

'The Big Bang Theory'

Pop culture never really forgot about space exploration, Thompson said, noting the perennial popularity of sci-fi series such as "Battlestar Galactica" and "Star Trek." But movies like "Gravity," advances in commercial space flight and missions to Mars have shifted interest away from science fiction to actual science, he said. And those developments have helped repair NASA's reputation, which took a beating during some unsuccessful times.

"Instead of getting stories about broken Hubble telescopes and stuck rovers, we have pictures coming down from Mars," Thompson said.

But don't expect the buzz generated by "Gravity" to translate to the next generation of hopeful astronauts, Thompson warned.

"Take 10 kids that leave 'Gravity' having seen a new vision of their future, and nine of them [will say], 'I want to make movies like that.'"

For all its success, the film has received criticism. After it debuted, Tyson took to his Twitter account to blast what he says are scientific inaccuracies in the film. His beefs included why Sandra Bullock's character's hair failed to float in zero gravity, why a medical doctor was servicing the Hubble Space Telescope and satellites that orbited in the wrong direction. Even former astronaut Scott Parazynski took his jabs at the film in an interview with Vulture.

Mark Hammergren, an astronomer with Adler Planetarium, says he understands the critiques but is happy the film has captivated mass interest in his line of work.

"[The criticism] reinforces the stereotype—the negative stereotype—of the geek," he said. "Nobody goes into 'Gravity' thinking these are how things really operate."

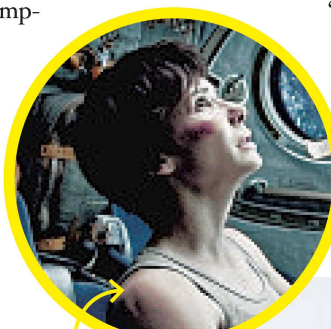

Instead, Hammergren said he's excited to see space take the spotlight. He gives the example of Bobak Ferdowsi, the young, mohawked mission planner for Mars Curiosity, as a case study in increased interest in astrospace. After the successful landing, Ferdowsi's image went viral, prompting entire Tumblrs dedicated to him and even getting President Obama to refer to him as "Mohawk Guy."

"It's a little dismaying for him being trotted out as being unusual for a scientist," Hammergren said. "But it kind of breaks down the stereotypes, and I am all for that."

It's becoming cooler and cooler to be a nerd, and Hammergren is seeing his line of work only getting more attention.

"At some point, it became not only socially acceptable, but hip to be a geek," he said. "And space is coming right along with that."

Cop alleges forced sex

OFFICER ACCUSES SUPERVISOR OF 3 YEARS OF ABUSE

Chicago Tribune

Kelly Hespe had been a Chicago police officer since 2001 and says she was happy in her work on the midnight shift at the Shakespeare District on the West Side—until Sgt. Gerald Breimon became her supervisor in late 2008.

Not long after, Hespe alleged in a federal lawsuit filed Thursday that Breimon began to engage in an escalating course of sexual harassment and abusive conduct. Hespe said she was eventually forced to have sex with Breimon numerous times while the two were on duty over the next three years. When she tried to end the relationship, he became abusive and retaliated against her, the lawsuit alleged.

"I didn't feel that I had anybody that I could go to [for help]," Hespe said at a press conference at which she generally maintained her composure, though her voice quavered at times as she detailed allegations not spelled out in the lawsuit.

"I was terrified of him, that he would harm me or my family," the 42-year-old mother of three told reporters at the West Loop office of her attorney, Daniel Herbert.

Hespe has been on medical leave from the department since she suffered severe chest pains last March at work and was taken by ambulance to a hospital for observation, according to the lawsuit. The suit alleged she has been diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder and suffers anxiety attacks, depression, nightmares and fear when seeing Chicago police squad cars.

Breimon, a 20-year veteran of the department, had his police powers stripped for several years while he faced sex abuse charges after a woman he pulled over in September 2003 alleged he groped her under the pretense of a search. The criminal charges were dropped in 2007 after the woman settled a civil lawsuit with Breimon and the city and then failed to cooperate with prosecutors in criminal court.

Breimon did not return a phone call seeking comment, and the police department declined comment. "We take all allegations seriously but cannot offer comment on ongoing internal investigations," department spokesman Adam Collins said in an email.

The lawsuit was filed against the city, Breimon and another of Hespe's supervisors. The suit, which seeks unspecified monetary damages, accuses the city of facilitating "the very type of misconduct at issue here" by failing to adequately punish similar wrongdoing.

Lululemon founder blames women's bodies

Twitter stock skyrockets on first day

5 It's a good day for the world seen in 140-character bursts.

Twitter began trading Thursday on the New York Stock Exchange with an 80 percent gain in its stock price. Within half an hour, the stock had powered up 92 percent, to $50. Near the close, shares were at $47.77, up 83 percent.

The social network priced its IPO at a higher-than-expected $26 a share, and it rocketed to more than $48 at the open.

Twitter reached the decision after a lengthy debate between the underwriters and company executives.

Bloomberg News noted that the trading went off without a hitch, unlike the Facebook debut 18 months ago. A design flaw in the Nasdaq's opening auction sent Facebook into contortions at its opening. The New York Stock Exchange didn't rush Twitter's opening, either. It took 79 minutes for shares to start trading, which made it one of the longer opening auctions, Bloomberg noted.

On Monday, Twitter raised its price range to between $23 and $25 a share from an initial target of $17 to $20. The final IPO price is more than 50 percent higher than the low end of its original price estimate, underscoring the soaring demand from institutional investors.

Twitter could not have picked better timing. Its IPO is coming as the stock market nears record highs and the IPO market surges.

The company lost $1.43 million over the last four quarters on revenue of $53.4 million, according to its most recent filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The opening price valued the shares at about 22 times the forecast 2014 sales, nearly double that multiple at social media rivals Facebook Inc. and LinkedIn Corp.

Twitter executives including Chief Executive Dick Costolo and founder Jack Dorsey thronged to the floor of the New York Stock Exchange to witness the IPO. The Big Board snatched the offering away from Nasdaq after the normally tech-focused Nasdaq stumbled with the larger Facebook flotation last year.

"Facebook was so overhyped people felt like they couldn't miss out," said Kenneth Polcari, a senior floor official at O'Neil Securities Inc. "Twitter isn't like that, though you can feel the excitement."

Senate passes LGBT non-discrimination act

7 WASHINGTON The Democratic-led Senate, reflecting a major shift in the past decade in public support of gay rights, passed a bipartisan bill Thursday to outlaw discrimination against gay workers.

But the measure, which cleared the Senate 64-32, with 10 Republicans joining 52 Democrats and two independents in voting "yes," faces an uphill struggle in the Republican-led House. The Employment Non-Discrimination Act of 2013 has become the latest battleground in an ideological fight within the Republican Party.

An increasing number of Republicans support gay rights, but conservative groups threaten to challenge those who support the White House-backed bill.

Critics complain that the legislation represents an unwarranted federal intrusion in the workplace that would force employers to violate religious beliefs in deciding whom to hire.

Backers say legislation would protect people to be able to love whom they choose without the fear of losing their jobs.

VS. DETROIT, NOON SUNDAY, FOX

STEP ASIDE, DETROIT

If any team can improve Motor City-based flicks, it's the Bears

By Jack M Silverstein | FOR REDEYE

The Lions are coming to Chicago on Sunday, with both teams tied atop the NFC North at 5-3. For the Bears, 2013 has been a season in transition—they still have a star unit, but it's the offense, not the defense, that's turning heads. So in honor of the offensive star power and a date with Detroit, here are eight movies set in the Motor City that apply to the dominance of Marc Trestman's troops.

JACK M SILVERSTEIN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @READJACK

JAY CUTLER

"RoboCop"

For Cutler, there is nothing more apt than "RoboCop," the story of a policeman who gets blown to bits and resurrected with the help of all the armor, protection and firepower he needs. There is little difference between Alex Murphy getting gunned down and Cutler getting sacked 158 times in 63 games. Murphy/Cutler was out there with no protection!

BRIAN CASSELLA/
TRIBUNE

"Out of Sight"

Seriously, have you seen "Out of Sight"? It's fantastic. Like Forte, it's overshadowed by big-name peers ("Jackie Brown," "Get Shorty," Adrian Peterson, Frank Gore). And also like Forte, it's an underrated gem with a bit of everything. For "Out of Sight," that would be humor, action, intrigue, sex appeal and star power. For Forte, that would be rushing, catching, blocking and big plays.

JOSH McCOWN

"8 Mile"

Picture this: the visitors' locker room at Lambeau Field, 10 minutes before game time. McCown sits in a bathroom stall puking his guts out. Brandon Marshall yells, "Yo J, you ready?" Cue the music: "Look, if you had one shot, or one opportunity, to seize everything you ever wanted, in one moment, would you capture it? Or just let it slip?"

Jeffery

ALSHON JEFFERY

"Malcolm X"

Malcolm Little spent his formative years in Lansing, Mich., and was later known in his hustling days as Detroit Red, to distinguish him from a man nicknamed "Chicago Red," aka Redd Foxx. Well, Bears fans are witnessing the rise of a new leader in Alshon Jeffery, a man with as much potential in his chosen field as Malcolm X eventually had in his. And boy, few receivers are better than Jeffery at hustling down the field and hustling cornerbacks for position on jump balls.

BRANDON MARSHALL

"Beverly Hills Cop"

A troubled yet talented superstar gets a much-needed change of scenery and injects new life into a straitlaced culture. Axel Foley turned the Beverly Police Department upside down by eschewing by-the-book methods for his own instinct, while Marshall turned the Bears upside down by giving them, ya know, a passing game. "Is this the man who ... WRECKED the Bears' receiving record book?" Yes. Yes, it is.

MARTELLUS BENNETT

"Roger & Me"

In Michael Moore's documentary, an unconventional man of the people (Moore) takes on the status quo and wins new fans in the process. Sounds just like the Black Unicorn, a man whose YouTube videos and Twitter feed are full of nods to the fans who cheer him on. And like Moore, Bennett is an eccentric showman disliked by some and cherished by others.

Josh out, Jay in for Sunday

Trestman says Cutler worked '24/7' on rehab

Chicago Tribune

Thanks for the win over the Packers, Josh McCown, but Jay Cutler will take it from here.

Cutler participated in Thursday's practice, and coach Marc Trestman said the Bears quarterback has been medically cleared to play and expects him to start Sunday against Detroit.

"He's cleared to play so he's going to play," Trestman said.

Trestman said Cutler had an "excellent" practice, the latest step in his recovery from the torn left groin muscle he suffered Oct. 20. Trestman said Cutler took all the snaps during practice and "did everything."

Trestman said Cutler worked "24/7" on his rehab, and his rapid comeback from what was expected to be at least a four-week absence is exactly what was predicted by Bears receiver Brandon Marshall.

"There was a critical amount of hard work and effort he put in," Trestman said. "It says a lot about his commitment to the team."

Cutler said of his rehab, "We stayed on it. We did a lot of soft-tissue work. ... We threw a lot at it."

Cutler tipped his cap to backup Josh McCown, saying, "He did an unbelievable job. If you ask the guys in the locker room, no one is really surprised."

Asked whether Cutler would be limited in what he could do, Trestman said, "If he couldn't do everything, he wouldn't be out there. We would never put him out there if he was not cleared."

Cutler concurred: "If I wasn't 100 percent ... I wouldn't have been practicing today."

As for preparing for Ndamukong Suh and the Lions' pass rush, Cutler said, "Once you get in the game, it's reactionary stuff. We tried to mimic that. I feel ready."

In seven games this season, Cutler has 1,658 yards passing, 12 touchdowns and seven interceptions. His backup, Josh McCown, has thrown for 476 yards and three scores with no picks. McCown threw for 272 yards and two TDs against Green Bay on Monday.

OFFENSIVE LINE

"Four Brothers"

Four adopted brothers join forces to protect their neighborhood and avenge their mother's death, just as Jermon Bushrod, Matt Slauson, Kyle Long and Jordan Mills joined forces to protect their quarterback and avenge his past knock-downs, hurries and sacks. Credit director John Singleton/center Roberto Garza for leading the unit.

PHIL EMERY AND MARC TRESTMAN

"True Romance"

An unlikely duo forges a deep-seated bond, forming an aggressive, violent partnership that attacks all challengers. I mean, what else do you call an offense that opens a game with six straight passes, one 4-yard run, and then a 23-yard touchdown pass on third-and-6? Sounds a lot like Clarence and Alabama to me.

RICK YEAH!

Well, the Cubs have themselves a new manager. With any luck, two years will be enough to get to know him.

1	Welcome new manager Rick Renteria to the Cubs.	Renteria? I thought you said "diarrhea," what with him managing the Cubs.	The second you got in town, order your Ventr card; it may arrive by the time you're fired.	Get ready for the craziest love-hate relationship. You'll basically be hated unless you turn things around quickly.	Only 50 others have gone before you and failed. Good luck.	@Jfinger2011 Congratulations. Get ready to lose your job in two years.
2	Convince the Cubs to hire you as their next radio color analyst.	Name: Mock Hamelson. Catchphrase: Can of cauliflower...	I'm proficient in Word, Photoshop and have a working knowledge of HTML. Also, I have the voice of an angel.	I'd be the best mother%$#@* analyst—wait, what? We can't curse? Oh shoot. This may not work out.	I'm funny and smart with a great voice. I'll do it for free.	@davelosso Look, people like conflict. I hate Wrigleyville and this franchise. Let's light this candle.
3	College hoops is back! How's your favorite team looking?	Norfolk State's top player is named Pendarvis, which I originally mistook for a new ED drug.	My team is Kansas, and well, we always look good. Also, Bill Self has the voice of an angel.	Fingers crossed Illinois will make it into the tournament this year. The uncertainty really limits my trash-talking skills.	Michigan State's looking like the second-best team in the country, thank you very much!	@gibby79 The Cards are already looking fwd to next year, having most players cleaning up trash during games this year.
4	Martellus Bennett is a budding artist. What should be his next project?	Since he's already on my fantasy team, he can draw a hazmat sign and post it up.	Rearranging Ndamukong Suh's face as Picasso would have.	Go on America's Next Top Model: Athlete Edition. He's got the height and smile, and Tyra can teach him to smize.	He should paint the ceiling at Halas Hall and call it his masterpiece.	@Alex_J_Martin Smokin' Jay portrait.
5	Using a stun gun on your spouse after winning a football bet is like an anniversary gift in Wisconsin.	... Yosemite Sam using a stun gun on Mel Blanc after Pepe LePew finally wins over Penelope Pussycat.	... giving a wedgie till the underwear rips and is pulled over somebody's head. Stupid, childish and painful.	I only use the stun gun after losing bets. I mean, that is just bizarre.	@davelosso Getting to do something awesome to someone that you kind of love.

Wait, run that by us again ...

The Cubs formally introduced Rick Renteria as the 53rd manager in franchise history Thursday. With the announcement that he agreed to a three-year contract came all the usual niceties.

"Rick's reputation is impeccable," Cubs President Theo Epstein said Thursday. "You can't find anyone in this game to say a bad word or a neutral word about Rick."

Asked about his plans, the 51-year-old Renteria said, "My expectation is that we're going to compete and win." That's what you expect him to say, which is all well and good. But what did Renteria really mean during Thursday's teleconference? REDEYE, TRIBUNE CONTRIBUTED

The boucherie board at Big Jones in Andersonville is all about the details

ARTFULLY MADE

The boucherie board at Big Jones
KAITLYN MCQUINN FOR REDEYE

By Michael Nigrant | FOR REDEYE

Chicago is a sausage fest—but it wasn't always that way. Ten years ago, you'd be hard-pressed to find platters of encased meats, rustic pates and cured meats outside of the old-school German restaurants. But in 2005, Michael Ruhlman and chef Brian Polcyn released Charcuterie: The Craft of Salting, Smoking and Curing. Young chefs caught the charcuterie bug, and today almost any gastropub worth its pork has a butcher's board.

Though they are now prevalent, most of these meat platters are formulaic: a trio of meats, some circles of sausage, a few slices of grilled sourdough and maybe a mustard, a pickle or some jam. Often only one of the meats or pickles, or none, is made in-house.

And then there's the boucherie board ($22) at southern-focused Big Jones in Andersonville. It's a smorgasbord of house-made pickles, jams, mustards, mayo, cured meats, fresh-baked breads and crackers. The detail and abundance on this plate is emblematic of the fastidious nature of its chef, Paul Fehribach. Though pimento cheese and fried chicken are all over now, when Fehribach opened Big Jones in 2008, some of his biggest competition for southern cooking was Popeyes and Wishbone. Unlike some of the trend-hopping newcomers, Fehribach's cooking wasn't just a facsimile or homogenized idea of what southern food was. It was of a specific time and place, rooted in Fehribach's devotion to his study of legendary southern cooks such as Edna Lewis, John Folse and Paul Prudhomme (Commander's Palace, K-Paul's Louisiana Kitchen). Fehribach's etouffée wasn't heavy brown gravy and rice; it was golden, full of butter and perfumed with wine, a nod to the kind they made in Breau Bridge, La., in the 1940s. Often after you ate a dish like this at Big Jones, you could read about how Fehribach discovered and crafted the plate on his blog at bigjoneschicago.com.

Fehribach's boucherie board is just as detailed and well-crafted as that etouffée. He butchers whole hogs from Indiana's Gunthorp Farms. He renders down a whole hog's head, mixes the meat from the cheeks and the snout with a heavy dose of red wine vinegar and a Chinese five-spice-like mixture heavy on nutmeg, star anise and chunky whole peppercorns. The resulting fromage de tête de cochon pate is silky and pungent, sharp and spicy like no other in town.

Fehribach also takes more of that Gunthorp pork, heavily spices it with paprika and garlic, stuffs it into beef casings and smokes it over pecan wood for 4 to 5 hours until he has one of the best links of andouille sausage outside of the Louisiana bayou. Fehribach said he sampled a lot of andouille and was inspired by the one he had at Jacob's in LaPlace, La. He also smokes his tasso ham over pecan as well and rubs it with spice and honey. The tender pink knobs rimmed with a smoky brown ring waft a touch of cumin. In the fall, Fehribach also pots guinea hen for the platter. The fowl is boned and cooked, and the bones are made into a rich stock used to baste the cooked meat until it breaks down in to tender strands. This mix is stuffed into pots and capped with duck fat to make a velvety spread.

The meats are accompanied by thick swooshes of homemade aioli, pureed deviled egg and sweet dollops of house-made quince or huckleberry jam. In the spring, there are pickles made with ramps and fiddlehead ferns, and in the late summer and fall, pickled watermelon rind, wax beans and pearl onion. There is always a sweet and tangy chow chow (a pickled vegetable relish often made with cabbage, onion and carrot) and vinegar-spiked okra. There's a bourbon-brown sugar mustard on the board, too.

To carry all the meats and spreads, you'll find house-baked rye slices, freshly baked crackers (based on a recipe of the legendary southern cook Edna Lewis) crusted with benne (an African seed found in the south that's an antecedent to sesame seeds) and springy Sally Lunn white bread.

WORTH A TRIP

Boucherie board at Big Jones
5347 N. Clark St. 773-275-5725

The last time I had the board, there were 16 different elements on it and every single one of them was made in-house. I can't get enough of this kind of detail and craft, but yet I can't help but think Fehribach is a little crazy to do all that work. Surely he could get away with buying a pickle or preserve to make a little more profit? "Sometimes my ambition is greater than it should be," he said. "But I always tell people if I were in this for the money, I would have gone into investment baking and stolen it." He added, "We've been profoundly disserved by the crumbling of American food culture. If or when my work is done, whether it's next year or 20 years from now, what I hope I've done is preserve, protect and cultivate [that culture]."

5 SPOTS TO KEEP ON YOUR RADAR THIS WEEKEND

Old Crow Smokehouse 3506 N. Clark St. 773-537-4452

Remember Tony Scroggs from the second season of "MasterChef"? He's playing pitmaster at this new Wrigleyville bar and barbecue restaurant from the folks behind Moe's Cantina and John Barleycorn. Fill up on everything from beer-can chicken to pulled pork that's smoked for 12 hours before landing on your table.

Burke's Bacon Bar

610 N. Rush St. 312-660-7200

This bacon-centric sandwich shop in River North has welcomed three new options to its menu of mini-sammies: a bacon burger with jalapeno jack cheese, a CBLT (think BLT with cheddar and extra-thick bacon) and a breakfast-inspired bacon-and-egg sandwich on a baguette.

Lafayette Creole-Cajun

Inside the Chicago French Market,
131 N. Clinton St. 312-207-6225

Baton Rouge native chef Sahil Singh brings the flavors of his hometown to the West Loop's French Market. You'll find him and co-chef Hiran Patel manning their booth across from the Little Goat Bread stall, serving dishes such as shrimp etouffee, chicken andouille gumbo and, coming this winter, fresh-made beignets.

2 Sparrows

553 W. Diversey Parkway 773-234-2320

Looking for an excuse to return to this charming Lincoln Park cafe? Try new fall menu items such as a pumpkin spice glazed doughnut and chili relleno with cranberries and almonds.

The Dawson

730 W. Grand Ave. 312-243-8955

Two local names in the restaurant biz—Billy Lawless of Henri and The Gage plus Branko Palikuca of suburban restaurants Amber and Topaz—teamed up to open this bar and restaurant in West Town. Chef Rene De Leon (an alum of Next and Alinea) puts his own twist on dishes ranging from chicken-fried steak to funnel cake.

Moroccan spiced vegetable tagine ($17) at Dusek's Board & Beer

Considering the 23 craft beers on tap and six cocktails centered on beer, it's no wonder that the cuisine at newly opened Dusek's trends more toward upscale bar fare, featuring dishes such as a grilled Juicy Lucy burger with bacon marmalade ($14) and duck wings with hot sauce. Among such offerings, the Moroccan spiced vegetable tagine ($17) feels a bit out of place, with dried fruit mixed into chermoula-spiced feta. This North African-style stew is served in a traditional tagine pulled from the restaurant's brick oven, and once opened tableside, the pot releases the steamy, spicy and herbal aroma from the chermoula. While the earthy sauce and dried fruits aren't commonly paired with beer, the combination works surprisingly well with Dusek's beverage list. The heartiness of the stew and the mound of couscous make this quite filling, so it's ideal for sharing at the table or taking home leftovers. TRIBUNE

Saoirse Ronan stars in
'How I Live Now'

War gets between kissing cousins

FAST PAUSED

Matt
Pais

» @mpais
» @tribune.com
» @mattpais

It's tough to forget Saoirse Ronan's three 2013 stinkers for long during "How I Live Now," which in its first 15 minutes features her character blabbering in voiceover ("The Host"), insisting on being called Daisy ("Violet and Daisy") and being asked if she's a vampire ("Byzantium"). That's almost too coincidental to be a coincidence.

"How I Live Now" registers as the best of the lot, but that's faint praise. Grumpy, anti-social Daisy (Ronan) calls her dad a [bleep], and she seems to be right: He sends her to live with her stepcousins in the English countryside despite the widespread military presence and bombings taking place in this near-future world. Eddie (George MacKay), who kind of looks like Ron Weasley if he'd grown up handsomer, takes an interest in Daisy—when he's not healing a hawk with a broken wing and communicating with cows or something. Based on the pair's minimal interactions, it seems this guy probably would take an interest in any teenage girl who showed up.

After a nuclear bomb kills thousands in London—prompting Eddie's younger sister, Piper (Harley Bird), to ask, "What's a nucular?"—the young family members hole up together until gunfire and soldiers divide them. Will Daisy and Piper find their way back to Eddie and his brother, Isaac (Tom Holland), before anyone is killed? Or at least before Daisy freaks out at her young companion, who doesn't want to walk day in and day out?

How I Live Now

Ronan's long journey on foot somewhat recalls the superior "The Way Back," though Daisy gradually opening up to the world and taking responsibility for her family registers as the film's only effective emotional component. Director Kevin Macdonald ("The Last King of Scotland") and a trio of writers adapt Meg Rosoff's novel without justifying (to those who haven't read it, like myself) the romantically tinged view of kids during wartime for a story that's totally apolitical. "How I Live Now" contains no information about the largely unseen enemy, but this seems like an oversight rather than a choice.

Something the writers should have chosen is to not end the movie—MINI-SPOILER ALERT SORT OF—with a voiceover from Daisy saying how she lives now. Don't include the title of the movie in the last line that's spoken! You wouldn't want "Star Wars" to end with Luke saying in voiceover, "Well, those were some wild star wars."

Chicagoans direct a bummer film

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» @mattpais

As riveting as it sounds, "The Motel Life" fits snugly into the moody nook that film festivals save for forgettable downers with recognizable faces.

In this bleak drama set around Reno, Nev., Frank (Emile Hirsch) long has looked after his older brother, Jerry Lee (Stephen Dorff). They live the kind of down-and-out existences hidden behind brown curtains, too many bottles and songs that could use a drink of their own. When Jerry Lee gets Frank out of bed in the middle of the night, panicking after accidentally killing a child in a hit-and-run, Frank does what he can to help. His brother, who lost part of his leg years ago, soon takes off and shoots himself in his bad leg, landing in the hospital and fearing jail time for vehicular manslaughter.

Based on Willy Vlautin's novel and directed by Chicago native brothers Gabe and Alan Polsky, this humorless film wants to unfold with the profound anguish of the blues. Instead, it feels like someone who just picked up a guitar and hasn't found a way to make his story crackle. The best parts of the film occur when Frank tells Jerry Lee exaggerated stories—about homicidal pirates and beautiful, available women—that appear on screen in lively, animated fashion. For these guys, the past and the imagination are far better than the present, and the film's watchability follows suit.

The Motel Life

Despite looking even younger than the actors' nine-year age difference, Dakota Fanning turns up as Frank's ex in an underwritten but similarly dismal subplot.

The Polskys strive to tap into a firm family bond that holds in hard times and people who struggle not to fold when dealt an unfortunate hand. What they deliver, though, feels like well-performed acting practice and a woeful tale that sometimes can't distinguish human error from bad luck.

Not the evil elves!

When Thor (Chris Hemsworth) first appears in "Thor: The Dark World," he's dominating a battle in Vanaheim (home of Visneyland?) and destroys the Rock—er, a monster that resembles a walking rock collection—with a single hammer smash to the face. It's easy. Too easy.

That's part of why, despite Hemsworth's perfect casting, I again have tried and failed to care about the Marvel comics superhero whose contributions to 2012's "The Avengers" identified him as a useful team player. Largely on his own in 2011's dull "Thor" and now in "The Dark World," Thor, his mighty torso and his powerful-enough-to-turn-anyone-into-a-badass weapon lack vulnerability. Fans may say, "But he'd risk his life for Jane (Natalie Portman)!" These movies make me think how lovely Thor and Jane's kids would be, but not how majestically dreamy their bond is.

Following his previous battle with the underwhelming Frost Giants, Thor now copes with Dark Elves who return in pursuit of aether, an evil power that looks like possessed, flying red wine. Seriously, this is the main villain and the world-destroying force at work. The film also grows complicated rather than engrossing as multiple worlds move toward the convergence they achieve every 5,000 years. That unlikely coincidence isn't the only bad luck here: Thor's throne-craving bro Loki (Tom Hiddleston) was the juiciest character in "The Avengers," but he spends much of "The Dark World" in jail. It's as rewarding as when Lisbeth Salander lay around in bed in "The Girl Who Kicked the Hornet's Nest."

Better used in a small dose is one of the Avengers (no, I won't ruin who) in a brief, self-parodying cameo; it's the film's most effortlessly fun moment. Otherwise, a few strong images from new director Alan Taylor notwithstanding, "The Dark World" becomes the latest expensive approximation of entertainment that equates destruction with eye-popping splendor.

And none of the script's semi-funny moments involve Kat Dennings (returning as Jane's snarky assistant), who again clearly thinks she's hilarious but registers only as obnoxious. How this annoying one-trick pony continues to get work I have no idea.

Good food. Good for you. Good for the earth.

 Matthew McConaughey
 in 'Dallas Buyers Club'

Don't mess with McConaughey

FAST PAISED

Matt
 Pais

» mpais

The Matthew McConaughey of "Dallas Buyers Club" is not the muscular, Mr. "all right all right all right" of "Magic Mike," a performance that contained expert and under-appreciated depth beneath the bluster. As real-life activist and AIDS patient Ron Woodroof, McConaughey looks thin. Small. He reportedly lost close to 40 pounds for the role, which isn't Christian Bale-in-"The Machinist" gaunt, but it's not far from it.

When the film begins in July 1985, Ron is contributing next to nothing to society. He's a minimally employed electrician and part-time rodeo bull rider, running away from lost bets and sleeping with anyone who's interested. Then, a shock: He tests positive for HIV. Denial becomes devastation as the rider becomes the ridden. But you know what happens when you mess with the bull.

At its core, "Dallas Buyers Club" is a story about shifting priorities and challenging the unchallengeable. Ron, a proud homophobe and racist fond of the six-letter F-word, would be the last person you'd expect to partner with Rayon (Jared Leto), a transgender woman also suffering from the virus. Yet results from Ron's last-ditch effort at prolonging his life—rebellious against a system that only approves use of AZT, which seems to have negative effects—adjust his mission and perspective. McConaughey is excellent in a performance that doesn't have a big, quintessential Oscar moment, probably because he's an actor who never overplays like that. It's another highlight in a career rejuvenation that's been a treat to watch.

Dallas Buyers Club

As a dramatic counterpart to last year's "How to Survive a Plague," "Dallas" struggles in trying to hit marks of storytelling, social consciousness and occasionally funny entertainment value. Jennifer Garner plays a doctor slowly beginning to believe Ron's skepticism of AZT; it's the sort of subplot part that may be based in reality but doesn't feel like it.

Where the film excels is the tension—between bigots and their targets, activists and the FDA, life and death. Something tells me many viewers will respond to Ron's fight against a government that doesn't always hinge on common sense.

'Frances Ha'

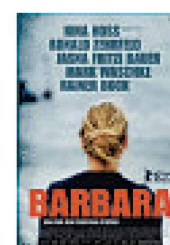

Frances Ha

Director Noah Baumbach's "Frances Ha"—co-written by star Greta Gerwig—is another story about an aging post-graduate who can no longer afford to be "fun," "free-spirited" and "irresponsible." Gerwig stars as Frances, a semi-professional dancer whose roommate moves in with somebody else, forcing Frances to crash on a series of couches while waiting for her dreams to come true. The main character is a too-common type, and Baumbach's use of black-and-white recalls a vintage Woody Allen film. But the movie is so, so funny, full of Baumbach's usual crackling dialogue between people who on some level realize they're just playing artificial roles in each other's lives. Extras: Criterion's DVD/Blu-ray combo pack includes an interview between Baumbach and Peter

Blackfish

One of the year's most controversial documentaries tells the story of Tilikum, an orca whale who killed a trainer at SeaWorld Orlando in 2010. Documentarian Gabriela Cowperthwaite comes at this material like an investigative reporter, calmly building a case against aquatic amusement parks that profess to improve the lives of their captive sea creatures. Some of the parks have pushed back against "Blackfish," claiming that Cowperthwaite is being too selective about her facts. Regardless of whether the film is wholly fair, it's a riveting story, raising pertinent questions about our relationships with wild animals. Extras: Additional interviews.

Barbara

From one of Germany's best working filmmakers, Christian Petzold, comes this tense period drama starring Nina Hoss as a doctor making plans to defect from East to West Germany, though held back by her concern for one of her young patients. Petzold re-creates the paranoia of life behind the Iron Curtain in 1980, as the heroine worries about whom she can trust with her plans. But "Barbara" also is a movie about a woman making the kind of hard choices that nearly anyone should be able to recognize. —NIEL MURRAY, LOS ANGELES TIMES

Skip law school, collect $1,000

Local lawyer offering 'Anything But Law School Graduate Scholarship'

Chicago Tribune

A Chicago personal injury attorney who says he's concerned about the future of the legal profession has put his money where his mouth is—by offering to pay people to not go to law school.

Matthew Willens announced this week that he's launching a $1,000 "Anything But Law School Graduate Scholarship" for students planning to go to a nonlegal graduate school.

Willens, who also teaches at his alma mater, Loyola University Chicago's law school, isn't opposed to legal education, though he acknowledges some law schools are "pumping out more lawyers than there are lawyer jobs."

Instead, he said he wants to steer more—well, at least one a year for now—gifted students toward a more promising career path.

And he's open about there being a self-interested reason, in addition to the publicity he's generating.

Law school grads with crushing student-debt loads and no job offers are launching their own practices and taking on clients even though they have no experience, he said.

"They're hanging a shingle and they just really don't know what they're doing," Willens said. "From a selfish perspective, it doesn't help the profession. It's a black eye."

The law school market has started adjusting to the slack in demand for attorneys. Applications at law schools were down 18 percent this fall compared with 2012, according to the Law School Admission Council.

"Some of the brightest people in the country are graduating with no real chance of becoming a quality lawyer," he said.

Hulu series pairs up unlikely heroes

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

» cwagner@tribune.com
» @showpatrol

Sam Pinkett and Phil Bourne make an unlikely crime-fighting duo on Hulu's "The Wrong Mans."

"I'm a town planning and noise guidance adviser for Berkshire County Council," Sam says in the premiere, then adds this about his new pal, Phil: "You're a 31-year-old mail distribution assistant who lives with his mum."

They're definitely not as wise as Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson, or even as sharp as the bumbling crop of FBI and CIA agents working on any number of series this fall. Yet Sam and Phil's comical attempts to solve the mystery they stumble into make "The Wrong Mans" a worthwhile diversion from network TV's crime procedurals.

Hulu's second co-production with British broadcaster BBC, the six-episode "The Wrong Mans" stars actor/writer James Corden as Phil and Mathew Baynton as Sam.

Sam, hung over and regretting the dozen or so drunken calls he made to his ex-girlfriend (and boss) the night before, witnesses a car crash as he shuffles to work. He hears a cellphone ringing at the crash scene, answers and suddenly finds himself caught up in a hostage situation that could result in the death of a kidnapped woman.

The Wrong Mans

At work, Sam confides in office idiot Phil, who believes they are the right men to solve the mystery. "This is our moment," he says. "We have been chosen."

The two leads play off each other nicely, with Baynton alternating between innocence and annoyance while Corden is all gung-ho bluster—until they face danger. Their mismatched buddy dynamic is completely believable.

Americans may recognize only a few members of the supporting cast—Emilia Fox, Dougray Scott, Dawn French—but they're all good.

The ambitious series finds a nice balance of slapstick and suspense. You might feel cheated if you're expecting the usual setup and joke, setup and joke format of many American sitcoms, but there are plenty of surprises and laughs.

The first episode takes a while to get its footing, but the boys are off and literally running by Episode 2 as the familiar case of mistaken identity evolves into a full-on spoof of TV and movie thrillers. It's not perfect, but "The Wrong Mans" is on the right track.

SOMETIMES A LITTLE CONFUSION TURNS INTO SOMETHING SEXY

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Last week, during our daily dicking-around-online sessions, we noticed that Lady Gaga and Josh Hutcherson were going to be on "SNL." "Man!" we thought to ourselves, "that would be one hilarious hookup!" As it turns out, they're hosting on separate nights, because someone decided Lady Gaga could act, but it got us thinking: Which "SNL" host and musical guest hookups this season would be hot, and which would be total turnoffs? We ranked them to decide. DANAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA; GETTY IMAGES PHOTOS

HAIM

Nov. 23 Based on his recent comments about wanting a "Hunger Games" threesome, Josh would be 400 percent on board with this idea.

TINA FEY

ARCADE FIRE

Sept. 28 Granted, Arcade Fire might not know what to do with themselves in this menage, but surely Tina would help them find their way with a gentle, nerdy touch.

EDWARD NORTON

JANELLE MONAE

Oct. 26 This feels like it would get freaky in a really "Lars and the Real Girl" meets "Weird Science" kind of way. But sexier.

KERRY WASHINGTON

EMINEM

Nov. 2 This would be spectacular in that she probably would just slap him in the face.

MILEY CYRUS

MILEY CYRUS

Oct. 5 Been there, done that, got the tattoo.

BRUCE WILLIS

KATY PERRY

Oct. 12 Remember that time when Bruce Willis hooked up with Jennifer Aniston on "Friends"? Yeah, we weren't OK with that either, and Katy's a heck of a lot younger.

LADY GAGA

LADY GAGA

Nov. 16 Again, we've seen this, but the Gags probably would try to do some sort of smash cut to herself hooking up with her drag alter-ego, Jo Calderone. And we couldn't be more sick of him.

"[Lorde is] not supporting other women. That's my honest opinion, that's what I would say to her if I saw her."

STAR DATE

A Nov. 14 casting call at the Park West Theatre could take two young actors to a galaxy far, far away. Disney is conducting an international search to fill two roles in a film that is rumored to be "Star Wars: Episode VII." True or not, hopefuls can read the casting notice at opencastingcall2013.com for more info.

Before and after

What's up with AMC's "Breaking Bad" spinoff focusing on lawyer Saul Goodman? Not even Saul can say. "I know they've talked about prequel, but they've also talked to me about sequel, and they've also talked to me about a mix of prequel and sequel," Bob Odenkirk told ign.com. Consider us intrigued.

Less is more

Remember when Heidi Montag got F-sized breast implants in 2010? Yeah, that was a bad idea. After battling body pain and numbness in her arms, the former reality star has downsized to a C, she tells usmagazine.com. "I'm the new, new, new Heidi!" she said. Hoo boy.

Super Netflix

Several Marvel Comics superheroes are each getting a 13-episode Netflix series starting in 2015. The streaming service and Disney announced a deal Thursday that will mean live-action series based on Daredevil, Jessica Jones, Iron Fist and Luke Cage, followed by a miniseries based on Marvel's "The Defenders" comics.
